FREED HOSTAGE SAYS LEAH SHARIBU IS ALIVE!

ABUJA, NIGERIA

U.S. political leaders help sway Nigerian officials to free access to Washington

BY GEORGE SHERIDAN

When a Nigerian politician called Leah Sharibu, a 23-year-old student held captive in the north-eastern state of Borno, he was not just a name but a symbol of the thousands of women and girls who have been abducted by Boko Haram in the past few years.

One of those who helped with her rescue was Leah Sharibu's mother, Hafsa Sharibu, who was instrumental in getting her daughter's name to the attention of U.S. political leaders.

U.S. political leaders, including Sen. Ben Ray Lujan and Rep. Louie Gohmert, played a key role in pressuring Nigerian officials to release Leah Sharibu. Their efforts were instrumental in getting her name to the attention of Nigerian officials.

Leah Sharibu was released on Jan. 25, 2020, after being held captive for nearly two years. She was found in a village in the north-eastern state of Borno, where she had been living with other captives.

Leah Sharibu's rescue was a major victory for the Leah Foundation and the #FreeLeah campaign. It showed that the international community can make a difference in the lives of hostages.
