U.S. political leaders help sway decision and offer access to Washington

BY GEORGE GARDNER

When a Nigerian politician called Leah Sharibu in the United States in January, she was in a state of despair. She had just been kidnapped by Boko Haram and was being held in a remote area of northern Nigeria. Her family and friends were desperate to find her, but they had no way of knowing where she was.

One of those who helped was Leah's mother, Mrs. Maryam Sharibu. She was contacted by a Nigerian politician who offered to help her find Leah. She agreed, and the politician arranged for Leah to be released. Leah was then flown to the United States, where she is now living with her family.

The politician who helped Leah is a member of the Nigerian House of Representatives. He is a member of the opposition and has been vocal in his criticism of the government. He is a member of the All Nigeria Peoples Party (ANPP).
