TOURISM REPORTER

Leah Sharibu, the freed Christian girl held captive by Boko Haram for nearly three years, has returned home to Abuja, Nigeria's capital, after spending 10 months in a Nigerian military hospital recovering from injuries sustained during her kidnapping.

She was released on Sunday morning after being held captive by Boko Haram since July 2014. She was reportedly held at a secret location in northern Nigeria for nearly three years before being freed.

Leah Sharibu was captured by Boko Haram in July 2014 while she was visiting her mother in Kaduna state. She was held captive for nearly three years before being freed.
